RALEIGH, (SGRToday.com) - New polling data supports the contention that there is a rift within the Republican Party between conservative Tea Party supporters and more moderate Republicans usually referred to as the "establishment";

id Rasmussen reports that 59 percent of Republicans say Republicans in Congress aren't doing a good job of representing their constituents' values. Just 29 percent say the GOP is doing a job in that regard. The number is high, but is down slightly from 65 percent last summer. The discontent among Republicans with their members of Congress peaked in 2009 at a high of 73 percent.
