Vice President Joe Biden told a Charlotte audience Hillary Clinton is doing well after the Democratic presidential nominee left a 9/11 memorial service early and appeared faint. Biden told an invitation-only audience in the Overcash Building at Central Piedmont Community College the former Secretary of State has been upfront and transparent about her health.

His speech focused on ways to improve the economy, which Biden said includes investing in infrastructure and education.

, Biden praised the school as well other community colleges. His wife, Jill Biden, teaches at Northern Virginia Community College.

He said the Democratic Party wants to improve access to early childhood education and to make college more affordable.

“Whether you are a PhD engineer or a computer programmer – you will have to be constantly re-trained,” he said according to the Charlotte Observer.
